

MEDIA CENTER / ALL MEDIA CONTENT

JOURNAL

Robots with a soft touch at Munich's Automatica

Previous industrial robot systems had to be separated from people by fences or walls to protect operators from injury. But sensors on German manufacturer Kuka's models mean they can interact directly with humans. Robots no longer run on inflexible line-by-line programs. Nowadays they interact directly with their environment and operators.

MORE FROM JOURNAL

The Top Stories in Three Minutes 13.06.2014

Syrian refugees in Germany 13.06.2014

ISIS makes further gains in Iraq 12.06.2014

Oil prices rise as crisis in Iraq continues 12.06.2014